BETTER HEALTH BEGINS WITH QUALITY IN-PERSON CARE

The COVID-19 pandemic has disrupted how people receive healthcare - telemedicine visits made up 35.3% of primary care visits in the second quarter of 2020, compared just 1.1% in 2018-2019. Office-based doctor's visits have decreased by 50.1%, meaning that fewer people are receiving potentially life-saving health check-ups and tests. Blood pressure checks have decreased by 50.1% and cholesterol tests fell 36.9%, leaving many people with untreated health conditions that could lead to serious illnesses, costing companies time and money. Simply put, telemedicine is no substitute for quality, in-person care that can detect health problems before they become life-threatening conditions.
